

The Eighteenth Century

Theory and Interpretation

VOLUME 51

WINTER 2010

NUMBER 4

Richardson's Sir Charles Grandison and the Symptoms of Subjectivity Rebecca Anne Barr	391
What Is Called Corporeal: William Blake and the Question of the Body Erin M. Goss	413
Death Becomes Her: Figuration and Decay in Swift's "Birthday Poems" to Stella David M. Palumbo	431
'All Whores are Jacobites': Terror, Book, and Body in the Writings of John Dunton Elizabeth Kubek	451
'Accumulate! Accumulate! That is Moses and the Prophets!': Secularism, Historicism, and the Critique of Enthusiasm Jordana Rosenberg	471
Scripture, Enlightenment, and the Invention of Race: Colin Kidd's The Forging of Races George E. Boulukos	491
Servants of the Market: Pamela's Literary Entourage Lynn Festa	497
A Review of Evan Gottlieb, Feeling British: Sympathy and National Identity in Scottish and English Writing, 1707–1832 Janet Sorensen	503
Notes on Contributors	509
Author Index	511
Subject Index	513